

As a flight attendant with UA, I urge the Commission to not relax the rules for in-flight use of cell phones. There is no clear evidence that cell phone use does not interfere with avionics. Problems would arise with passengers complaining of cell phone conversations taking place right next to them in a cramped space, taking time away from flight attendants' safety and service duties as they try to resolve those problems. Terrorists could use 2-way devices to effectively communicate among themselves on a flight in order to coordinate an attack. Cell phone use in flight is an ill-advised idea.
